

SHRM Accredited (pending) Webinar With Jackson Lewis P.C. Leave Considerations for Employers, Including FFCRA

The Coronavirus pandemic has shaken the business world and the workplace will never be the same. The Families First Coronavirus Response Act (FFCRA) was an Act of Congress meant to respond to the economic impacts of the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, but it expires on December 31, 2020. While the act provided certain protections and benefits for American workers affected by the pandemic, employers should consider what impact expiration of the Act will have and whether further action by the federal government may or may not result in additional obligations. Please join us as we discuss these issues with labor and employment law firm Jackson Lewis.

This program is SHRM credit pending.
